Ruth taught it to a group of local Quakers. [47] It has been argued that his greatest contribution to the game was to restore Lizzie Magie's original rule of "buying properties at its price" instead of auctioning them, as Quakers did not believe in auctions.[48][49] Another source states that Quakers simply "did not like the noise of the auction".[28] Among the group was teaching Hoskins' game were Eugene Raiford and his wife, who took a copy of the game with Atlantic City street names to Philadelphia. [50] Due to the lack of familiarity with the streets and properties in Philadelphia,[30]the theme version of Atlantic City was the one that taught Charles Todd, who in turn taught Esther Darrow, wife of Charles Darrow. [51] After learning the game, Darrow started distributing the game as Monopoly and never talked to the Todds again. [28] Darrow initially made the games for himself and his wife, but later sold them to the Parker Brothers.
